

Everyday we are potentially at risk from an unseen threat; or is it unseen? Those who wish to do us harm walk among us, often in plain sight. As New Yorkers, we have a duty to help protect ourselves, our families, and our neighbors.

Over a decade after 9/11, terrorism remains an ongoing concern. Within our own borders, individuals may seek to launch attacks or provide support to terrorist activity overseas. As the threat continues to evolve they may use our personal assets, or assets found within our communities, in order to acquire certain materials, skills, or knowledge to advance their plans. Anyone can become a victim of their activity.

With your help, we have the opportunity to identify these individuals before they cause harm. During the course of preparing to engage in violence, the individuals often conduct themselves in ways that make them stand out as suspicious.
